Pat's View of It.

Mr. Dobbiegh tries to keep in touch with the progress of modern thought by an occasional chat with his hired man, Pat. Pat is a fresh faced, blue eyed son of the Emerald Isle, who is faithful in all things and does a lot of independent thinking along lines strictly his own, and more than once Dobbiegh has found considerable enlightenment in difficult problems by listening to his views. So the other morning, when Pat came into the library with an armful of logs to replenish the wood fire, Dobbiegh, who had been reading a rather acrimonious editorial in the morning paper on the subject of the suffragettes, ventured to ask Pat's opinion on the subject.
"Do you think women ought to be allowed to vote, Pat?" he queried.
"Sure O' do," was the instant response. "We need 'em."
"We need them, eh?" smiled Mr. Dobbiegh. "That's a novel idea. What has brought you to that conclusion?"
"O've watched the situation," returned Pat, "and every year since O've been in this country the complaint has been the same. There ain't enough votes; there ain't enough votes; there ain't enough votes."
Mr. Dobbiegh laughed and rubbed his chin in perplexity.
"Not enough votes, eh?" he repeated.
"Naw, sorr," returned Pat. "Whin I worrked for Mr. Hawkins, who run for mayor here foive years ago, he was licked, and whin O' asht him w'oy he says, 'Not enough votes.' Whin Mr. Bryan was licked t'ree toimes for president, what was th' reason? The same—not enough votes. And so on in every campaign we've iver had, sorr. It's the same old complaint—not enough votes. So O' says let the wimmen vote and maybe we'll hav enough for wanst to fillet iverbody."—Harper's Weekly.

In Due Course.

Champ Clark, at a dinner in Washington, pleaded indulgence for a somewhat rambling speaker.
"He'll arrive," said the Democratic leader, "if you'll only give him time. He is like Dr. Thirdly."
"Dr. Thirdly was dividing up his sermon into its appropriate heads one Sunday morning when a member of the congregation shouted frantically: 'Meat, man! Give us meat!'
"Well," said Dr. Thirdly promptly, "hold on, then, till I'm done carving."
—Pittsburg Gazette-Times.

Self Defense.

"Are you going to have a garden this year, Mr. Subbubs?"
"Yes; I've got to. As long as I have a garden I can make it an excuse for not taking my automobile out of the garage and piling up expenses for new tires and things."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Diplomacy.

"She puts some on her handkerchief to make people think she has just been in an automobile."—Baltimore American.

Virginia Health Proverbs

In a few simple, one-sentence sermons, as true as gospel, the State Health Department gives to the citizens of Virginia more direct information on the preservation of health and happiness than ever before since the department was established, and Commissioner Ennon Williams and his able assistants are to be congratulated on their work.
Here are some of the health proverbs which should be pasted in the hat:
"The man who says he had rather have the smallpox than be vaccinated never had the smallpox."
"An open window is better than an open grave."
"Warm rooms have killed more people than ever froze to death."
"If you let the child have measles when he is young you may save a doctor's bill later on, but you may have to pay the undertaker now."
"A good iron pump costs less than a case of typhoid."
"If your milkman brings you warm milk make it hot for him."
"Wire screens in the windows may keep crape from the door."
"A fly in the milk often means a member of the family in the grave."
"If some people were as much afraid of flies as they are of bad water there would be less typhoid."
"When you see a child looking like an angel do not kiss it; you might make a real angel out of it."
"Scarlatina may not sound so dangerous as scarlet fever, but ask the undertaker."
